

Segment Filmed in St. Augustine by Executive Producer David Scott for HBO Real Sports w/Bryant Gumbel

David Scott Executive Producer and Mary Carrillo Correspondent for HBO Real Sports w/ Bryant Gumbel, a monthly news magazine that explores sports-themed issues were in St. Augustine August 25th filming a segment about the History of African Americans in swimming. They were highlighting the struggles of African Americans to desegregate the pools.

Initially, HBO's Zehra Mandami contacted Gwendolyn Duncan after viewing the Accord freedom trail website on August 17th seeking information on Dr. C.T. Vivian. Zehra noticed that Dr. Vivian was the Keynote Speaker for the ACCORD/Northrop Grumman Freedom Trail Luncheon in 2008. After supplying that information further contacts were given to Zehra and the ball started rolling from there. Dr. Hayling, leader of the St. Augustine Movement was contacted as well as demonstrators Purcell Conway, who was in New York at the time, Attorney Dan Warren, David Nolan, Maude Jackson, Shed Dawson, and others to see if they would take part in the segment.

David Scott sent an email introducing him self and said that he would be in St. Augustine on Tuesday, flying in from Toledo, OH following another interview. Plans got underway to show the visitors some Southern Hospitality. David Scott wanted to use one of the churches associated with the Movement so Rev. Rawls was the first person to come to mind. After being contacted, Rev. Rawls said, "We can make it happen..." and he did.

The film crew arrived early Tuesday morning setting up their equipment in the church. Mrs. Cora Tyson and Dalonja Duncan came in on Monday evening and prepared a fantastic brunch for the guests in a room prepared in the St. Paul A.M.E Church Educational Building for the guests to take a break. Filming started at the Hilton Bayfront Inn, where the crew also spent the night, and lasted well into the night. Richard Duncan took the crew to film areas in West Augustine where youths often swam in the gravel pits when segregation prevented them from swimming in local pools or beaches during the Jim Crow Era.

To complete the day, David Scott, David Nolan, J.T. Johnson, Richard, Gwendolyn, Dalonja, and Elizabeth Duncan enjoyed dinner at Harry's Restaurant.

When U.S. Olympic athlete Cullen Jones took to the podium with his teammates to accept the 4x100m freestyle relay gold medal at the Beijing Olympics last year, Americans saw something sadly unfamiliar: a successful African-American swimmer. Jones' story, while inspirational and historically significant, is a reminder of the black community's complex relationship with swimming. A Supreme Court ruling desegregating American beaches and pools in 1971 sparked riots and bloodshed, and much of the African-American community continues to hold an aversion to swimming today. Black children drown at a rate more than three times greater than whites and as many 75% of African-Americans do not know how to swim. Now, with Olympic gold in his pocket and fame on his side, Cullen Jones is doing everything he can to reverse these trends. Correspondent Mary Carrillo joins him to explore the relationship between race and swimming in this country.
